MAYOR SCRUGGS USING THE INTERNET TO KEEP RESIDENTS INFORMED

GLENDALE, Ariz. – Residents can now stay informed of city projects, issues and priorities through a new online communications tool that Mayor Elaine Scruggs is using to keep citizens up to date.

“As many of us know, the Internet is a powerful and growing communications medium for disseminating information to a large group of people,” said Scruggs. “Recent technology upgrades to our city’s computer network have now provided me the opportunity to reach out to citizens in a new way.”

Signing up to receive the mayor’s new online bulletins is easy. Residents only need to visit www.glendaleaz.com and select “Sign up for Glendale Bulletins” in the top right-hand corner of the home page.

Citizens’ registration information will not be shared with any outside agencies or individuals.

Scruggs has already used her bulletins to inform residents on a variety of topics, such as annexation, downtown development updates, transportation issues and the Super Bowl 2008.

The Mayor’s Bulletins are part of a new city online notification service that enables citizens to receive weekly emails on City Council meeting and workshop agendas, news alerts and job announcements.
